

GOES TO PLEAD WITH THE QUEEN.

Marie Artega Will Brave Peril in Her Father's Case.

FOR QUESADA'S RELEASE.

He Has for a Year Endured the Horrors of a Cuban Dungeon.

HER MISSION SEEMS HOPELESS.

But Disregarding Warnings of Risk to Her Liberty, and Even Her Life, She Sails for Spain.

Mrs. Marie Artega, a widow, young and pretty, is willing to sacrifice her liberty, perhaps her life, for her father, Colonel Julius de Quesada. This woman, whose name in the cause of Cuba has made her famous, is now on her way to Spain, where, despite the entreaties of her friends, she will endeavor to secure a personal interview with the Queen Regent and implore her to

MISS HUGHES, HER TEETH—PEARLS OF GREAT PRICE—AND AN AMUSING WITNESS IN HER SUIT.

Issue an order that will release her father from prison in Havana, where he was thrust more than a year ago by General Weyler.

For more than a year he has languished there, although his friends have labored that he might obtain his release. There is but one thing left to do that he may again breathe the air of freedom, and this young woman is going to do it. She will spare nothing to bring about this interview with the Queen, and when it is obtained she hopes to so touch the heart of the Regent that the latter will grant her prayer.

On all sides her friends have advised her against it; for they are certain that she will not only be unsuccessful, but fear that in the country where she is against Cuba, she may meet with harm, perhaps herself be made a prisoner. Her father has begged her to remain at home and let him suffer rather than place herself in danger. But to all she has turned a deaf ear.

"I see my duty clearly," she said in answer to their warnings, "and I mean to accomplish it. My father shall not remain in that frightful prison if it lies in my power to prevent it. If in endeavoring to do so I place myself in danger or am imprisoned, I shall be happy in the knowledge that I fulfilled my duty toward him who has done so much for me and to the cause for which we are all striving so earnestly and faithfully. I believe that I can free him, and I will leave no stone unturned to do so."

While the Cuban enthusiasts of this and other cities applaud these sentiments and agree with them, they already look upon the Colonel's daughter, as they call her, as a martyr to the cause. For they are of the opinion that those who have caused Colonel de Quesada's imprisonment will tolerate no interference and that the person who does interfere will surely meet a sad fate.

Hoping to keep her proposed object from the Spanish public, Mrs. Artega is traveling incognito. For this reason, also, the Cubans throughout the country have been requested to be reticent regarding the matter. They have obeyed their instructions so well that, while Mrs. Artega sailed Saturday, it was not until yesterday that the fact became generally known.

The woman left the home of her friends, No. 260 West One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street, early Saturday morning, after giving it out that she was about to start on a business trip through the "South." Despite all these precautions, several Cubans and Cuban sympathizers were on hand to bid the little woman a fair and prosperous voyage.

HAWAII IS IN NO DANGER.

State Officials Think It Improbable That Japan Would Attack the Little Republic.

Washington, June 7.—The State Department has no fear that Japan and Hawaii will become involved in warfare, even though diplomatic relations between both Governments be broken off, as is now threatened. The Department has received no official information to the effect that the Japanese Minister contemplates withdrawing from Hawaii, but if the newspaper reports be true the officials are of the opinion the results would not be more serious than a diplomatic rupture.

The withdrawal of the British Minister from Venezuela two or three years ago is referred to as a case quite similar to what may happen in the Hawaiian Islands. Yet Great Britain and Venezuela did not go to war. The United States sent Lord Sackville West back to England, but the British Government did not regard that as an act of hostility, and our Minister was not withdrawn from the Court of St. James.

The relations between Hawaii and Japan may become seriously strained over the immigration question, but our officials believe that Japan has too much respect for the United States to provoke war with the islands, because this Government would at once lend assistance to Hawaii.

rowly escaped the beating of his life. Early yesterday morning the Centre street humorist visited a wholesale comb establishment on business. He became fascinated with a box of fine-tooth combs. He saw possibilities for a huge joke and slipped a comb, with its double set of serrated teeth, into his pocket. The fact that he was at liberty on $1,000 bail to answer the charge of trying to bribe a public official did not quench his humorist spirits or diminish his humorous bump.

Hughes invited a friend to join him at lunch. Soup was the first course.

"See that building across the street?" said Hughes, "a man made $10,000 on it without ever seeing the property."

The friend turned to look out of the window, and the joker, unobserved, slipped the fine-tooth comb into the consommé.

"How's that soup?" asked Hughes.

"Bully, never tasted better," was the answer. "I'll have to."

Suddenly the friend paused, a look of horror flashed over his features, his eyes bulged out, for there before his disgusted vision lay the dusky comb at the bottom of the plate.

With a wild yell he rushed toward the door, while Hughes nearly fell from his chair in convulsive laughter. In a minute his guest returned and would have winced the floor with the joker had not the waiter interfered.

Hughes has the comb, but has lost a friend. He continued to laugh all day yesterday at the charge of bribery, under which he is awaiting examination on Friday. He still insists that it is all a huge joke on William V. Taylor, formerly in the employ of the Commissioners of Accounts, who charged Hughes with trying to bribe him when he was a public official. The Commissioners, however, insist on regarding the matter in a serious light.

SAYS THIS TENOR IS A SVENGALI.

Only by Shutting Her Eyes
Can Rosa Shatten Be
Just to Herself.

SWEARS HE ROBBED HER.

Sent Her to Europe with $1.75,
but Promised to Join and Marry Her.

"Oh, Rosie, help me!"

The voice was pleading and very melodious. It was the voice of Bernard Goldman, and used to be heard in the chorus of Lillian Russell's opera troupe. Its high tones rang through the stillness of the Yorkville Police Court yesterday, but failed to touch the heart of Mrs. Rosa Shatten, the person addressed, who shut her eyes tightly and exclaimed: "Go away, you, you Jack the Ripper, you, you wretch!"

The young woman was very much excited, but when the dulcet voiced tenor had been led away to a cell in default of the $2,000 bail in which he was held on a charge of grand larceny she calmed down and told the following story of her wrongs:

"He is a mesmerist," said she. "He made me give up all my money, and he sent me to Europe in the steerage, when I was always accustomed to the cabin. His bad eyes controlled me, for he is a wicked mesmerist. He first tried to get me to leave my husband, who had been good to me and given me big diamonds and taken me many times to Europe in the first cabin, but I shut my eyes and said, 'Go away.' Then my husband died, and the day I went to the cemetery to put up the monument on his grave I was very tired, but Benny (he made me call him Benny) came to my house in the evening and talked love. For weeks he talked it, and sang to me, but I said to him, 'It is too soon already, Benny. I cannot marry yet.'"

"I am worse as you," he said. "I am divorced."

"Then he told me that he could not marry me in this country, and that we must go to London to be married. He said he would join me there, at a hotel kept by a man named Fisher, at No. 20 Spitalfields. He said that I must sail from Philadelphia, while he would go by way of Canada. "But here I started he went with me to the American Institute and Odd Fellows lodges, in which my husband had held life benefits, and collected $1,200 insurance, which, he said, he would keep for me. I gave it up because I loved him, and he was a mesmerist."

"He sold my husband's clothes for $50; he sold everything in my flat and kept the money; he took my diamond brooch and rings and my big solitaire earrings, which are worth $850. He said I might be robbed."

Then, before I started for Philadelphia to take the steamer, he gave me $1.75, saying that I would not need any money

WILL THEIR "PULL" "GO" IN COURT?

Plaintiff Says She Knows to Her Sorrow It's a Strong One.

SHE IS SUING DENTISTS.

Miss Hughes Says They Yanked
Out Twice as Many Teeth as She Told Them To.

A young woman, whose lips revealed, when she spoke, small, regular teeth that caught all the light; a practical joker, whom nothing exasperated except cynicism about his humor, and several experts, whom logic found firm and facts hesitating, made yesterday's session in Part VI. of the Supreme Court, beautiful and amusing.

It was the suit of Miss Mary Hughes against the New York College of Dentistry to recover $5,000 for the loss of two teeth. She is in her twenty-fourth year. She was dressed in black, with a red leather belt, a red satin tie, and red roses on a large black hat. Her hair and eyes are black. She did not smile. She was an actress, but two years of suffering from toothache, caused by the college's incapacity, she said, deprived her of engagements. Judge Bookstaver listened attentively.

Miss Hughes explained that she went to the college April 9, 1894, with her mother and uncle, and was told that two of her teeth were to be extracted and several to be filled. Gas was given to her, and when she awoke she had lost a molar for which she cared not; a bluish next to the molar which was a perfect tooth, and a part of an upper tooth. She heard one of the men who were standing by her chair, say, "My God, man! Hurry up!"

Sure Something Was Wrong.

"I suffered tortures," said Miss Hughes. "I felt sure that something had gone wrong, but the physician assured me that nothing wrong had happened. The pain kept me walking up and down the room all the night, and another heating hot water bags. When I returned to the college, the physicians there made an elaborate apology to my mother and to me for having pulled out two teeth instead of one from the lower jaw, but said nothing about having broken the tooth in the upper jaw."

Miss Hughes suffered from the broken root of this upper tooth until its fragments were picked out one by one. She had paid the college $4.75 for the work, and ceased calling there, July 25, 1894. The loss of the bluish and the breaking of the upper molar, which might have been saved, spoiled her articulation in speech and in song.

The cross-examiner showed a notice in big letters in a frame, and asked Miss Hughes if she had not seen it at the college desk. "Yes," she replied, "after the operation." The notice is to the effect that operations are performed by students, and that the fees charged are for the materials used, not for professional service. Miss Hughes said, "I had the physician's assurance that he, not students, would attend to me."

Miss Hughes's mother corroborated her daughter's testimony in this. The cross-examiner asked if the physician had not kept his promise. She replied, "No." He asked if she could recognize or describe the men who performed the operation. She said, "No. I could not remember." The cross-examiner affecting amazement, Mrs. Hughes said calmly, "I may hereafter remember Judge Bookstaver, not you," and the cross-examiner bowed politely.

Mrs. Hughes said that her daughter had been obliged to nurse her food upon one side of her mouth for a period long enough to produce an inclination to indigestion that had never occurred before her experience at the college. Miss Hughes's uncle, Brian G. Hughes, made the same observation.

Mr. Hughes smiled as he sat on the witness chair. He said: "I asked what the charge of the college was for use of material?" asked the cross-examiner.

"No," replied Mr. Hughes.

Record of a Practical Joker.

The cross-examiner, Mr. Rand, asked: "You are the Brian G. Hughes celebrated as a practical joker, who found a fortune in an old desk?"

"I found papers in the secret drawer of an old desk," Mr. Hughes said.

"And pretended you found a fortune?" Mr. Rand repeated this question two times. Miss Hughes's counsel, Mr. Schmidt, objected to it. Judge Bookstaver pounded his gavel at it. Mr. Hughes made ten different replies and never answered it.

"You issued circulars for stockholders of an ice machine, among whom you mentioned the Prince of Wales," said Mr. Rand.

"It wasn't an ice machine," said Mr. Hughes. "It was a scheme to fetch the water of the Niagara Falls to New York."

"Was the Prince of Wales a stockholder?" "The circular didn't say he was. The circular said: 'Among prominent Englishmen who may be mentioned are the Prince of Wales, and a very good joke,' replied Mr. Hughes, with a self-satisfied air.

"Where's the joke?" asked Mr. Rand.

Mr. Hughes looked contemptuously at his questioner.

"You gave bonds which were worthless as a wedding gift to a young man. Where's the joke?"

Mr. Hughes became pale with indignation.

You exhibited at the cat show a common street cat which you labelled Nicodemus, with a pedigree. Nicodemus won the first prize. Soon after this moment gave birth to kittens. Where's the joke?"

Mr. Hughes's indignation turned to supreme contempt. He said nothing for a while. Then he smiled sardonically and said: "In the fact that Nicodemus was quarantined in male attire."

Experts for the Defence.

The counsel of the New York College of Dentistry gave the outlines of his defence, which was a surprise. He said that the college was an educational institution, with an intricate wherein those who practised were students; that the accident of pulling two teeth instead of one might happen with a professional expert; that the upper tooth in Miss Hughes's jaw was not broken at the college, and he called experts to the witness chair.

Dr. Holbrook Curtis said that a woman might lose all her molars and nothing in power of articulation. Miss Hughes's lawyer, however, made Mr. Curtis revise this declaration into a statement that a loss of molars entailing a swelling of the gums might entail a loss in degree of articulation.

Dr. Hasbrouck said that the best practitioner in dentistry might pull out a molar and a bluish while trying to pull out only a molar. He said that there was such a thing as anglosis, or fusion of roots in teeth.

Miss Hughes's lawyer presented a young woman, a blond in a blue of France gown, who would say that Dr. Hasbrouck had criticised severely the work done on her teeth by the New York College of Dentistry; but the Judge would not let her testify.

The trial will be continued this morning.

for the trip, as he would be in London as soon as I was there. When I got to the ship I found he had bought me a steerage ticket. Oh, think of it—a steerage ticket, and I had never sailed but in the cabin.

"When I reached London I found the hotel at No. 20 Spitalfields, but the proprietor said he had never heard of me. For days I wandered about the streets of London, until I dropped from starvation. I was taken to the London Hospital, where I lay for six weeks between life and death. When I was well enough I applied to the American Consul for help, and he gave me money to get back here. I arrived a week ago, and since then I have hunted for this man. Now I have found him, and he has a wife and five children. But I will make him suffer. Although he is a mesmerist he can fool me no more."

Goldman's examination was set down for this afternoon by Magistrate Pool. He refused to talk about his case.

BOSTON'S NOTED GUARD.

Celebration of the Two Hundredth and Fiftyninth Anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery.

Boston, June 7.—The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company celebrated its two hundred and fifty-ninth anniversary to-day. The programme was like that of former years, including a street parade, a church service at the New Old South, a march back to Faneuil Hall, where the annual banquet was served, followed by the annual election on Boston Common. Colonel Henry Walker, captain of the company, was in command. The commander had a very large staff, including Colonel Howard, Fourth Maryland Regiment; Colonel Edward Wymann, Captain A. A. Frisom, Captain W. H. Jones, Colonel E. H. Brookway, Captain Decker and Lieutenant T. C. Hummel, Old Guard, New York; Colonel W. A. Gile, Worcester Continentals, and others.

As the Ancients passed the State House Governor Wolcott and several members of his staff, with a number of invited guests, joined the column and were escorted to the church, where Rev. S. H. Robbin delivered the annual sermon.
